tion Ignored by Speaker-Many Members of Legislature Oppose Mr. Lodge.

One of the first official acts of Governor-elect Eugene N. Foss, after be takes office at the State House Jan. 4 will be to appoint a successor to fill his unexpired term of two months as congressman from the fourteenth district. Mr. Foss today said that he understands the appointment in this case is made by the Governor, and that he is to appoint his own successor in Congress. Mr. Foss was not ready to discuss the candidates for this position.

It was said by one intimately associ ated with Mr. Foss that the latter would probably appoint the candidate who, on a recount of the vote cast for congressman in the fourteenth district last Tuesday, proves to have won the election in district. The contest was very close, and until after the recount it will not be known whether the Republican or the Democratic candidate has won.

Mr. Foss will go to Washington when the short session of Congress opens in December to attend to many official mat-ters which have accumulated during his campaign for Governor. He will return to Boston during the December holidays to prepare his inaugural address when he eral natures coming to our laboratory

CULEBRA, Canal Zone-The Isthmian road authorities have effected an adjustment with 58 claimants for $21,559 for improvements on land inundated by the waters of Gatun lake, the value of which improvements was estimated originally at $66,000. There were 116 claims presented originally, of which some have been rejected and 30 remain to be settled.

Agents of the railroad company went into the Trinidad valley to locate the claims on blue prints showing the situation and elevation of each holding and to determine the character of the improvements. No allowance is to be made for clearing or yearly crops, but the occupants of the land are to be allowed to remain on the land to harvest the crops at their own risks until the land is inundated. Democrats will have a majority on joint ballot of 32. John W. Kern was indorsed last spring by the Democrats for United Shortall '87 and Arthur Winslow '81 for States senator and will in all probability become the colleague of Senator Shiveley, also a Democrat.

Of the 13 Indiana congressmen, Edgar Dean Crumpacker of the ninth district was the only Republican elected.

The Ohio Legislature was captured by the Democrats and a Democrat will succeed Charles Dick in the United. States Senate. The Ohio Legislature on joint ballot, according to the latest figures, will be: Democrats, 83; Republicans, 73, divided as follows: 63 Demo-6 crats to 58 Republicans in the House and 20 Democrats to 15 Republicans in the Inevitably, with a public that was clear as to the main points of its musical and dramatic likings the thing would soon be done, if only the artistic material were reasonably capable on the side of technique, reasonably pliant on the side of temperament.

It was not supposed that Mr. Russell's San Carlo formulas were anything more than a temporary scaffolding. Many of them have already been knocked away and the structure can soon dispense with what remain.

As a public we discerned at the very outset of the new undertaking, a year! ago, that although we had to combine many arts into a unit of expression before we could bring our opera to complete success, we must have good singing from our leading performers before we could go ahead at all. We saw that a Verdi or a Puccini performance with a weak cast or with a cast that was weak any one important point would

This performance represented the sum local accomplishment in opera in Boston. There our developing ideals could be fairly studied.

And what would any one who visited our opera house for the first time have said of us, judging our tastes by our approval of the Gilda of Mme. Lipkow-ska, the Maddalena of Mme. Claessens, the Francis of Constantino, the Triboulet of Bakianoff? He would have admitted of Mr. Goodrich, it has a negative quality "Lord Is a Man of War," Handel; min that we did not care about great moments, rather liked the unaccentuated climax. He would have said that we respect more the soprano who fulfils all Verdi's intentions acceptably than one who gives us an astonishing record of the Caro nome and an easy-going, parlante of the voices.

THE AUTHOR OF "THE FAMILY." Robert H. Davis, author of "The Famy," now in the fourth week of its run at the Globe, explains that the theme of his drama is "forgiveness."

Mr. Davis dedicates his play to his mother. He says: "My own mother was the inspiration of the play. It isn't all she is entitled to, but it is the best I can do. The earliest recollection I have of my mother is linked with the word forgiveness. I always received the paron at a moment when I was in a reeptive state of mind to appreciate it.

"When Madeline is found by her mother in the Springfield hotel and tells of her unhappy experience, the girl asks: 'Where can I go now?' The mother responds: 'Now you can come home.' That is what my mother would have done, and that is why the play is dedi-

Everybody who sees the play knows that Mr. Davis is a master of his subject. It is interesting to know from acquaintances of his that Mr. Davis is one of those men who enjoys life and devotes much of his time to making other folks

Mr. Davis has been in many of the towns of New England, and thus he obtains his color at first hand and was enabled to observe at close range the characters that he put into his play. His long newspaper and magazine ex-perience trained him to keep his eyes open in sympathetic observation of every hase of life.

Robert H. Davis is one of the widest known magazine and newspaper men in the country. He was born in Nebraska in 1869. His father was a pioneer clergyman. Mr. Davis began his newspaper work on the Carson Appeal, of which his brother Samuel is editor, in 1891. He soon went to San Francisco and did good work on several papers. He went to New York in 1895 and made himself a valuable man on the New York Journal, staying with that paper nine years, and doing journalistic work that had wide influence. His articles on the Chicago stock yards are regarded as having been directly responsible for the government investigation of conditions surrounding the packing of

In 1894 Mr. Davis became associated with the magazine and newspaper interests of Frank A. Munsey, and since that time has been probably the busiest magazine editor in the United States. Mr. Davis' work on the beef investigation is typical of his journalistic history. He has ever been associated with causes looking toward benefit to hu-

Miss Laverne a Boston Favorite.

The most striking success of Miss Laverne in Boston, however, was probably as Clancy in William Gillette's idyllic "Clarice." Clancy was one of the faithful colored servants of the South, loving and domineering over her master. Dr Carrington. She could become a perfect ury whenever a profane foot was set in er kitchen, or when outsiders attempted to break up the happiness of the home over which she watched so jealously. Miss Laverne illustrated this character with a wealth of characterizing detail and perfection of dialect that almost | 1900. made a star part out of a minor role. Clancy brought comical contrast into the sentimental dinner scene that made 'Clarice" one of the comedy gems of ecent, theatrical offerings. Its revival by William Gillette soon at the Hollis is a cause for liveliest anticipation.

William Gillette's Acting.

Apart from the boon to all classes playgoers of seeing William Gillette in such a series of successes as "Held by the Enemy," "Sherlock Holmes," "The Private Secretary," "Too Much Johnson," "Secret Service" and "Clarice"—each in its day marking a new advance in the art of stage illusion-these performances ought to be seized upon by every young actor and actress as an informing labora tory demonstration by an actor who knows his stage from footlights to gridiron, says the Springfield Union.

The manual of acting as it has a place n William Gillette's mind-and not be tween book covers as well-contain everything worth an intelligent, ambitious actor's knowledge. In every depart ment of activity in the theater-play writing, play acting, play staging, this man has shown himself a master.

Many, if not most of the effective de ices now used in stage effects, especially in the art of stage lighting, are of Mr. Gillette's invention. Nearly all of his own plays seem carefully woven tapestries of tricks, when analyzed, but when synthesized, or taken as wholes, are revealed as consummate specimens of technique in play writing and play staging. As a stage manager, Mr. Gillette's talent is that of an infinite ca-

Securities Decline Sharply Under Bear Operations and Much Liquidation of Long Stock Is in Evidence.

LOCAL MARKET OFF

Much irregularity prevailed in price movements on the New York stock exchange today. The local market also was inclined to be erratic and was some what weak during the early sales. The heavy selling of securities yesterday in New York was unexpected by many outsiders who had bought before the elections with the hope of making a profit in case of a Democratic victory in the state of New York. The decline also tended to unsettle things somewhat so that when the market opened this morning a hesitating tone was manifest.

At the opening prices were about the same as last night's closing. In some eases fractional improvement was noted, but stocks soon sagged off. ### WORK RESUMED AT CARNEGIE MILLS

PITTSBURG-The 35-inch, 40-inch and 72-inch plate mills of the Carnegie Steel Company's Homestead works resumed in fun on Monday after having been idle 78 4 78 76 76 76 76 for three weeks. While it was officially intimatea at the time of the shut-down that the suspension was ordered for the purpose of making repairs, it was a fact that the mills were fairly well up on orders and were not inconvenienced much through shutting down. The open-hearth department, No. 4, which was idle for about a week, also started up on Mon-

Many new contracts for plates, it is stated, have been placed within the past week, and specifications on old orders are also showing improvement. As a result the plate department of the Homestead plant is expected to be kept busy for the remainder of the year.

One of the stacks of the Carnegie Steel Company at Duquesne has been blown out for repairs during the past week. It is expected to resume in the near future.

The TITLE GUARANTEE & TRUST COMPANY of New York City will receive, on behalf of the British Columbia Railway & Development Company, subscriptions to the above allotment of treasury stock of said Company, consisting of 140,000 shares (par value $25), at $15 per share and said Trust Company will issue to subscribers with each certificate of stock a negotiable receipt and agreement as set forth below.

The British Columbia Railway & Development Company controls, through its ownership of the capital stock of the British Columbia & Alaska Railway, a most valuable charter granted to that railway March 10, 1910, by Royal Assent, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of British Columbia. This charter secures to it the right to construct and operate a railroad of standard gauge from the city of Vancouver to the northern boundary of the Province, a distance of over 1000 miles, together with the right to maintain and operate steam and other vessels and boats on all waters within the Province; to erect wharves and docks, to maintain and operate a system of telephone and telegraph_lines, with power to transmit messages for the public, and the right to conduct a general express business, etc.

The projected railroad runs through one of the richest territories on the North American Continent.

The resources of British Columbia, which is the Pacific Coast Province of Canada, are varied and almost without limit, as is shown by the following facts quoted from Government Reports:—Of a total area of 252,800,000 acres. there are 182,000,000 acres of forest and woodland, on which is to be found the finest timber in the world. The trade of the Province has increased over the finest timber in the world. The trade of the Province has increased over $19,000,000 in four years; her mines have already produced over $300,000,000; her fisheries, $114,000,000. Within her borders are milliops of acres of undeveloped paper-making material, the most extensive coal deposits in the world, immense deposits of iron ore, over 10,000,000 acres of wheat lands; her farms and orchards produce over $7,000,000 annually. British Columbia fruit has won the highest awards at expositions in the United States, Canada and Great Britain. The climate is so fine that the Province has been described as a vast health resort, and on account of the influence of the Japan Current, the extremes of heat and cold are not as great as in the State of New York.

A reconnoissance of the entire line has been made, showing that the road can be built with remarkably easy grades and that there are no physical difficulties to overcome. Two engineering parties of thirty-four men, under the supervision of the Company's Consulting Engineers, Messrs. L. M. Rice & Co., of Seattle and Vancouver, have just completed surveys over that portion of the line which will connect the Canadian Pacific Railway with the Grand Trunk Railway. This section of about 300 miles will be built first, on account of its importance as a connecting link between the two great railway systems mentioned. The richness of lands in the interior of British Columbia is becoming so widely known that immigration into the Province has already reached proportions which greatly overtax the present transportation facilities. The congestion of freight, due to the influx of settlers locating along the pro-The congestion of freight, due to the indux of settlers locating along the projected line of the British Columbia & Alaska Rajiway, between the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Rajiways, has been so great during the present year that the Canadian Pacific was compelled at times to refuse to accept freight for that point on its line, from which goods are at present forwarded to the interior by wagons and automobiles, thus proving that the construction of the British Columbia & Alaska Railway is a commercial necessity.

In addition to the revenue which this railroad will derive from the large and diversified tonnage supplied by the rich country which it will traverse, it will reap enormous profits through giving to Alaska its first rail communication with the outside world, which is known to be essential to the real develution. opment of the marvellous resources of that territory.

The necessary survey work having already been completed, the British Columbia Railway & Development Company will begin construction early next Spring. In the meantime it has been decided to acquire (by purchase or otherwise) along the projected line certain lands valuable for town sites, etc., which, when construction of the railroad has commenced, will immediately and materially enhance in value.

From the progress already made and in view of the exceptional prospects of this enterprise, the directors of the British Columbia Railway & Development Company feel confident that by May next the stock will have a demonstrable value considerably in excess of its present price. They have therefore completed arrangements with the TITLE GUARANTEE & TRUST COMPANY whereby said Trust Company will, on receipt of subscriptions, issue with each certificate of stock of the British Columbia Railway & Development Company a negotiable receipt and agreement, duly executed, under which, upon notice in writing to said Trust Company from any subscriber at any time before May 15, 1911, IT WILL RETURN to said subscriber on May 31, 1911, upon surrender of the stock certificate for cancellation, NOT LESS THAN 90% OF THE AMOUNT PAID IN.

DANEWAY HOUSE, GLOSTER, ENGLAND

An instance of continuity of tradition in craftsmanship

By Maxwell Armfield.

THE Golden Valley, so named by I Queen Victoria on an autumnal visit on account of its famous beech trees flaming then with orange and yellow, is of interest for many, reasons. It is still largely populated by descendants of the Huguenots and is noted for its sound traditional craftsmanship in iron and wood which has never quite died out. Unlike most similar districts in England it has preserved its traditions through the chaotic effervescence of the last century so that now, when things are shaping themselves in a more orderly manner, it has the inestimable advantage of a live tradition to be intelligently continued.

As a concrete instance of this no better example need be sought than Daneway house, a mansion of considerable age built with exquisite art happily so well preserved for us in many similar Instances in the district. Set on the steep rolling sides of the valley amongst deep copses of beech and rarer maple, nothing could be more expressive of the quiet and leisured charm of English fer. ountry life than this trim gray house, at any rate the place is neither kept as days of machine-made goods. a depressing museum of the past nor theroically" lived in by some one who will put up with inconvenience for the dulgence of sentiment.

Instead, we find the place put to the at possible use; its outhouses serving workshops and the house itself as owngom for the furniture. Mr. Jimon, who is responsible for this pleasant ctivity, has thus solved two problems it one. The beautiful house is open neely to all and at the same time prowith the best possible setting

Fishing in Greenland Waters

THE uncharted sections of the Arctic regions are familiar to the reading public chiefly through the more or less authentic exploits of explorers who are obliged to make the settlements farthest north their starting point. Dr. Cook's unsuccessful venture still remains a debatable quantity because of the lack of information that exists a garding the northern portion of the American continent. As a Danish colony, Greenland, with its more than 700,000 square miles and less than 12,000 inhabitants, has been almost like a myth; but if the present charting and surveying of the coasts are continued by the Danish government, the result will be of special benefit to the countries that pay attention to the fishing industry.

American fishermen have reason to look upon the work of Captain Borg, a Danish naval officer, as of importance to their vocation. After spending four years in the northern regions, Captain Borg has returned to Copenhagen, and he brings with him numerous charts as a result of surveying the fjords, harbors and rocks along the west coast of Greenland. As this is the first instance of work of this nature in the Arctic regions, geologists look upon the explorations as of even more direct importance than the mere reaching of the north pole itself. For Captain Borg has made it possible for fishermen to penetrate where the dangerous waters had prohibited them from entering.

A few weeks ago Gloucester fishermen returned from Davis strait with a catch of 140,000 pounds of prime flitches, equal to about 600,000 pounds of fresh halibut. For twenty years Gloucester fishermen had been prohibited from sailing and anchoring in those waters because of what had been considered an unsatisfactory influence on the natives. Whatever may have happened in the past, when the Jennie B. Hodgon arrived at Holstenborg, the Danish official center, the schooner and her crew met with a hearty reception, and the famous halibut fishing grounds are once more available to the fishermen. As an incident, it is worth noting that the arrival of the schooner marked the first appearance in twenty years of an American vessel.

Captain Borg's surveys of the west coast of Greenland will naturally enable fishermen to extend their operations further up Davis strait. Enough is already known of the ice-covered interior of Greenland to make it certain that the prospective revenues must come from the water or the land bordering on it. Uncharted fishing grounds in the north have frequently been a defeating agency where the best of seamanship could not prevail against the obstacles below the surface. Denmark's course in mapping out the coast lines and the waters will meet with the hearty approval of all

Efforts of the Danish naval officer should not be confounded with what Mylius Erichsen accomplished when this intrepid Dane and his companion, Jorgen Brunland, explored the interior of Greenland. The "Danish literary Greenland expedition," as was the official title of that remarkable journey by Erichsen and his friend, will be the foundation for the coming map of the country. Captain Borg paid direct attention to the rock-hewn coast and the waters. As a matter of fact, the eastern coast of Greenland is much better known than the west coast, since the former lies exposed to the Atlantic ocean. Whatever charting had been done before the advent of Captain Borg had been confined largely to the eastern shore line. There has been strong intimation that Greenland might turn out to be a second Alaska in the matter of mineral deposits. Expert investigation hardly confirms this report, but there is no doubt that a more authentic map will be of great value to maritime interests, and that the fishermen of the New England coast, especially, will gladly embrace opportunities that will come with a better knowledge

Egypt's cotton crop this year promises to be 1,500,000 bales larger than the crop of last year. As the shortage in the United States is likely to be fully as great, Egypt's increase will help out of the waters farther north.

PICTURES convey to children ideas of a character perfect or imperfect according to the skill of technique, consistency of relation to the accompanying subject matter and the strength of feeling that enters into their production. Art, perhaps, has no greater mission to perform than this one of formulating in the pliable thought of childhood correct impressions; to exercise, through the medium of the picture book and the children's page in the newspaper or the magazine, a good influence that will be noticeable in after life. Seeing aright in childhood governs more than anything the progress that comes later, and nothing leaves better defined inscriptions on human lives than the black and white or colored reproductions of drawings thumbed over by the little folk. Therefore, it is impossible to scan without chagrin many of the illustrations used to epitomize portions of stories disseminated by the publishers' syndicates at the present time.

True, observation has not tended to refute the declaration made long ago that few artists possess the happy faculty of sketching or painting children so as to portray the innocence that stirs fondness in mature hearts. There is a fleeting something that few illustrators seem to catch; the eyes, the mouth, the general expression usually are false as recorded by pencil, pen or brush. Women have succeeded the better, and to them is more logically entrusted the task of setting down child life on paper or canvas. Small wonder that the sister or the mother is, in comparison with men, delicately responsive to the attraction of childhood!

Yet what a marvel that the men who have the opportunity to draw pictures of children, or for them, fall so far short of doing justice to their subject! Why must such artists in depicting a lively boy, for example, outline only what is wayward, crafty, worldlywise and coarse? It is as if they felt that, even in these days of universal zest for the comic, no other outline would be sure of its popular appeal. Yet he is a poor artist, indeed, who cannot himself feel the charm of boyhood in its native purity and alertness. devoid of all that is sophisticated or coarse; and he is dull, indeed, who cannot find in the harmless pranks of such an age the wherewithal for pictures that in striving for fun shall neither run counter to the canons of art nor involve some subtle offense against common decency. All readers of today are coming to realize that not even' the pictures that are drawn for low-priced prints need be, in themselves, cheap. There is good reason for saying that readers of all classes are ready to welcome the syndicate that will allow its artists to break away from cheap conventionalism and depict the children

WHEN present contracts are filled over 2500 pay-as-you-enter street cars will be in operation in Chicago. One noticeable feature of them is that they ride better than they look.

From Vermont, where the idea of conserving natural resources has received powerful impetus in late years, comes the news that a wise legislative committee has reported favorably a bill providing a tax of 25 cents on every Christmas tree that may be cut. So high a degree of protection hardly seems necessary, but the avowed purpose of the measure-to prevent the forests of the state from being denuded of young treeswill stir sympathy everywhere among those who realize the shameful lengths to which destruction of the young fir growth was allowed to go in the past. A distinct improvement has resulted since communities awakened, but that something more is required seems evidenced each year by the introduction in legislatures of restrictive

The Christmas tree industry yields land owners in America about $160,000 a year, while consumers in cities pay fully $2,000,-000 for the trees. Joint profits of shippers and dealers, and transportation charges, make the difference in these groups of figures. Full trees are best for cutting between the ages of five and eight years, and Maine, Michigan and Oregon are the big centers of the industry. Two years ago, it was estimated, Maine furnished 350,-000, Vermont 250,000, New Hampshire 100,000, western Massachusetts 55,000 and Rhode Island and Connecticut 25,000 trees.

These figures give an idea of the size of New England's annual contribution.

Some years ago the government's chief forester partially allayed anxiety over the cutting of these trees by declaring: "As far as endangering the future life of our forests is concerned, the effect is infinitesimal compared with the destruction caused by forest fires and wasteful lumbering." This opinion does not sound like the conservation slogan of the last two administrations, nor like the New York fish, forest and game commissioner's order two years ago to wardens in the Adirondack mountains, to prevent cutting of young 'spruce and balsam trees for holiday observances. Although these trees have come to be regarded as practically indispensable one day each year, the imposition of a small tax is perfectly proper if required to check demand while growth ensues. Reasonable conservation may well be applied to the things that make for enjoyment, as well as to the necessities of life.

WITH proper economy in city expenditures, Boston apparently could have many more improvements of Boston common and the small parks, and also attain to the proud possession of those glamourous zoological gardens.

The Peabody Fund

THE graded school readers do not contain as much as they once did about the poor child of poor parents in South Danvers. Mass., who started out to make a place for himself in the world with little education but much pluck, and who in course of time became famous as George Peabody, banker and philanthropist. He was, indeed, among the first of the American millionaire philanthropists, but, unlike all those who have followed him, he made the bulk of his fortune, not in his own country and among his own people but in England and among strangers. He was among the earliest to extend financial aid to Arctic exploration; he helped to fit out Dr. Kane's expedition in 1852. He founded and endowed the Peabody Institute in his native town. He endowed museums in Harvard and Yale universities. He made public bequests to places in England and in the United States; Boston and Salem were among the beneficiaries of his generosity. He endowed with $1,000,000 the Peabody Institute at Baltimore, gave $60,000 to Washington College, Va., $50,000 to the Peabody Institute at North Danvers, Mass., and numerous and various sums to other worthy institutions,

His greatest act of philanthropy, however, was the creation of the Peabody educational fund, intended to aid in the establishment of schools throughout the South, at the close of the civil war. This fund has been in the hands of trustees for nearly fifty years. They have disbursed something like five millions of dollars. At a meeting held recently it was decided that the time has now come for the closing of the fund, and at the next meeting of the trustees. the last, perhaps, that will ever be held, the balance on hand will in all probability be disbursed pro rata among the previous Peabody beneficiaries.

The fund has rendered great service. The work accomplished through its aid will continue to exert a beneficent influence for many years to come. George Peabody used to be held up to schoolboys in this country a generation ago as a fine example of American manhood. It would do no harm in these later days if teachers should once again tell the story of his career.

WHILE reciprocity was being discussed in certain state campaigns, reciprocity was actually being planned by the Taft administration's commissioners at Ottawa. An agreement with Canada may be reached before Congress meets, too.

Now is your opportunity to compare the election estimates with the returns and to prove to your own satisfaction that imagination has not declined since the Elizabethan era.

IT HAS come to the point that when an aviator now flies over the British channel the newspapers not only get his name wrong but do not take the trouble to make a correction.

THE identity of "Old Grimes" has been established again, but why his old gray coat was buttoned up before and not afterward will always remain a mystery.

WHETHER his party or his favorites were successful or unsuccessful at the polls last Tuesday, the American citizen has the best of reasons for congratulating himself on one very important factor, namely, the steadying influence of American common sense. It is not an extraordinary thing in this country, or in any country where democracy has taken root, for public men, politicians and publishers, who have tasted of the delights of leadership, and, unexpectedly, of the bitterness of defeat, to express grave doubts as to the ability of the people to see the right course and to take it. Skepticism of popular intelligence and judgment has not always been confined to public men. The great Thomas Carlyle, sage and philosopher as he was, once indulged in the expression of a sentiment which cast an aspersion upon the intelligence of the entire population of England. Distrust of the public comes, apparently, by easy transition to those whom the public have trusted but trust no more. Periodically, even in this country, where the greatest possible safeguards have been provided for the conservation of human privileges, there is a demand from some quarter for the delegation of popular authority to some newly created body, for the contraction of public rights, for the greater centralization of power, and it sometimes seems as if the people were almost ready to admit their incapacity for self-government. It seems to be the case, however, that at the very moment when the outlook seems threatening for democracy the people step up to the polls and by the simple exercise of common sense and citizenship give a quietus to those who distrust them.

To proclaim that public opinion is always right would be to proclaim a falsehood. Public opinion is sometimes very wrong. But public opinion must be taken at its best, not at its worst, and at its best it stands for all that is true and just and righteous in human character. Individuals, personalities, come and go, rise and fall; ideas alone endure even in mundane affairs, and behind ideas is the steadying and supporting influence of the people.

This republic goes ahead today as last week, as last year, regardless of prophecies of disaster, and it will doubtless continue to move forward under the impulse that gave it motion over a century and a third ago. It never was a government of individuals. As a people's government it began, and as it is more highly developed it will become more and more, and not less and less as some pessimists would imply, a government of the people, by the people, for the people.

IF THE plan of Secretary Meyer for the [ creation of a great naval station at Guantanamo, Cuba, be carried out, it will simply be the development of an idea kept well in view in the settlement of American affairs with Cuba on the occasion of the first American evacuation of the island. At that time it was stipulated among other things that the new republic should grant to this country perpetual rights to certain tracts to be used for various naval purposes. One of these reservations was the island of Guantanamo. Of course, the probability that a great ship canal would be built through the isthmus was never lost sight of, but, at the time Guantanamo was chosen as a possible future naval base of great importance control of the Windward channel between Cuba and Hayti was the main object in view. It is now clear that Guantanamo may be made the base for naval operations necessary to the control of the Caribbean sea, the gulf of Mexico and the Panama canal.

The most ardent advocates of peace will concede that it is less likely to be disturbed through prudence than through carelessness. The United States should be in a position to command a respectful hearing at the hands of all other nations. To neglect precautions for the preservation of order on or around its own premises would be to invite the very trouble it is most anxious to avoid. As a naval police station Guantanamo may prove very serviceable to the cause of peace.

LATEST returns seem to bear out fully the first impression that the next national House of Representatives will have a safe working Democratic majority. There is another way of putting it, and one having a stronger and a more serious meaning for the Democratic party. That is to say, from all appearances it will be a majority which, whether it likes it or not, must assume the responsibility for legislation. True it cannot, without consent

President and Next House of the Senate, enact legislation; but it can prevent the enactment of undesirable laws, and it can, by doing its own part, place the burden of responsibility for the defeat of desirable legislation upon the Senate and upon the White House.

All this is contingent on a clash between the Democratic House and the Republican Senate and executive. There need not be a clash over ordinary legislation; a clash is deemed unavoidable in case the House insists upon putting into operation the more radical of Democratic policies, free trade and income tax, for example.

The House elected on Tuesday, it should be borne in mind, will not sit until one year from the coming December. President Taft will first have to deal with it in its long term of 1911 and 1912, and he will be called upon to communicate with it again in the short term of 1912 and 1913. It will expire, with his own term, on March 4 of the year last named. By that time the decision of last Tuesday may be reversed. On the other hand, by that time the Senate may have become Democratic. Even the presidency may have passed out of the hands of the party which has controlled it, save for two four-year intervals, for more than half a century.

It would seem to the impartial observer to be wise for the Democratic party to be content with nursing the small advantage it has already gained until such time as the country shall have increased its strength and its opportunities as a governing force. It will accomplish more by cooperating with the Senate and the President than by antagonizing them. The country has never taken kindly to a congressional deadlock, and the Democratic party will gain nothing by becoming a mere hindrance to legislation. If it is cool headed, conservative, patient, it may be able to continue in power until it shall have more freedom of action, but it will make a grave mistake if it forgets at any time during the next two years that it is serving on probation.
